Dauses of the Gigantic Craters and Great Fissure Eruptions.

It is evident to any one who glances spward at the moon that its volcanoes are on an immensely larger scale than those which still our globe. One exexistence when the thin, solid crust covering the molten interior was, owng to the solidification and contraction of the crust, much too small to contain the liquid material. The craters were therefore formed by the lave bursting through the crust and so relieving the pressure. Later, after this relief had been found and the crust had thickened, the interior regions by cooling shrank away from the solid shell, which was now too large and, being mitting the great fissure eruptions which produced the so called lunar seas. These extensive outflows of lava dissolved the original solid shell whenever they came into contact with it. much as they do in the present day in Hawall.
